

The Daily Freeman

Kingston, Monday Morning, June 22.

Gov. Dix's letter explaining his past and present personal habits respecting drinking, showed too great anxiety on his part for the temperance vote. It is not, however, as has been much said, the majority of that vote, sayway. The Governor is so well known to have been a pure man personally all his life, that nobody ever raised a question on the subject before he died himself. The temperance men of this state are not fools, and they know perfectly well that they can either vote for Dix or do worse. Meanwhile the Governor had better not adopt the tricks of politicians to secure a re-election; he is above the need of it.

The Times congratulates the sheep-fold in the words: "It is the great merit of the Republican party that it is able to purify itself." The thought will occur to some folks that it would be a greater merit yet, if the party did not happen to need so much purification. It is not to be said of a sailor that the water he got drunk and fell into the water he at once swam to the nearest land and waited for a passing vessel to rescue him, people would think it lucky that so tipsy a sailor did not drown forthwith. There was a man we have read about, who cured himself of consumption by drinking vinegar, and when he had got completely well the surgeons accepted his body for a skeleton without scraping the bones. He had purified himself, however.

It is costly this summer, and more than a thousand families in every large town have debated how they could pay the extortionate rates asked for it, while still regarding it as a necessity. Now comes along a blessed Albany doctor who shows an inquiring reporter that ice is rather a damage than a benefit. He is especially anxious to use of ice water, which induces disease and falls to quench the thirst. The only real need people have of ice in summer is to preserve meats and cool the water when it is brought to them in pipes, as is the case generally. But ice water should never be drunk as cold as ice will make it; it should be allowed to cool first to about the temperature of spring water.

An Albany paper quotes the London Telegraph to the effect that the world, "regarded in mass, is living beyond its means." There is no doubt that most civilized nations have increased their liabilities to an appalling extent within the last ten or fifteen years, England and Holland being the only exceptions. If the figures expressing in one sum the world's total indebtedness were placed on paper, even that old veteran in numbers, the Arithmetic man of the paper World, would faint away on the sight of them. This earth will soon have to go into the hands of a receiver, and we favor the appointment of the man in the world to take charge of the whole thing and run it for the benefit of the angels—the original stockholders.

Is It a New Era?

They had a good deal of fun out in Oregon during the recent campaign, at the expense of one George A. La Dow, a Democratic nominee for Congress. Mr. La Dow, it appears, was nominated without the least intimation of such a thing being given him, and the intimation when received was entirely surprising to him. His political opponents told as a good joke that the news made him sick. Whether this was so or not he certainly refused to make an active canvass or spend a cent for election purposes. Of course Mr. La Dow was consigned to Salt River at once, and the Republicans laughed in their sleeves to think what a soft thing they had on the Democratic. So it went on till election day, La Dow quietly staying at home attending to his farm and paying no attention to the canvass; but on counting the votes, what was the astonishment of his opponents to find La Dow elected by a fair majority!

It is unnecessary to remark that this occurrence is directly contrary to the ordinary means of securing an election; and the inquiry springs to our lips, is this the inauguration of a new style of carrying on political campaigns? Is "the use of money in elections" to have a practical and emphatic rebuff at the hands of "the people"? Are our dazed, dazed, windy-mouthed campaign orators to be laid forever upon the shelf? Are the halcyon days of election roars, newspaper mud-throwing, personal vilification to be matters of history? We hope so; but we fear not. Imagine Ben Butler running for Congress or the Massachusetts Governorship and then opening his mouth or his pocket-book during the campaign, remaining peacefully at his Essex homestead, his hands deep in those pockets, so capacious, if we are to believe the horrid newspapers, for the reception of spoons and things, his good eye cocked over the spine in a calm watching for the sure result. We want to take in this La Dow story, but we fear it is not a very substantial shadow of coming events.

Disintegration and Regeneration.

There! I fancy there is a sound of solidity in the "head" we have "put on" this article. We like it because it is a nice cross between a possible title to a scientific treatise and a polemic essay in a heavy religious weekly. Really, however, we did not go to the trouble of inventing it for either use just hinted at; our purpose being to say, under the protection of it, a word about political parties. Not less than two months ago Dr. Bacon addressed an open letter to Representative Phelps praising him for opposing inflation from his seat in the House, and giving his (Bacon's) views generally on what is interestingly styled the political situation. It appeared from the letter aforesaid that the Doctor held the poorest imaginable opinion of the present character of both the great parties now bidding for public favor; the one inside the walls of power, and the other thundering at the gates. He declared them each and severally moribund—in articulo mortis—in fact, dead as a doornail. Further, the Doctor was moved to praise Mr. Phelps to set about doing something in the direction of getting up a brand-new party, which should possess the advantage of innocence, youth, beauty and a "purpose"—to take the place of the offensive corpses soon to be interred from the eyes and noses of men. But of this, as the ten-cent non-victorians say, "more anon." Upon the first epistle-general of the good Doctor the Graphic was inspired to make a dozen or two casual remarks. The paper didn't think much of the preacher's advice, but regarded his letter as a valuable contribution to the sensitive straws which fill the useful office of showing which way the wind blows. The Doctor, so the Graphic said, was a staunch Republican, seaworthy from truck to keel and from stem to stern, and worthy, therefore, to see and to comment on what he saw going on around him. Now, on bringing to him and practiced vision to bear upon the situation as aforesaid, the Doctor observed the chaotic moribundity previously described. He did not feel it a duty to organize a crowd's inquest upon the bodies; probably for the reason that would have led him to refuse to do the same thing upon the body of Lazarus, had he been on the spot—they stank. For the lack of an investigation he was consequently unable to tell us what these defunct parties died of, further than to state that their last sickness was a general prostration. This, please understand, is what the newspaper avers the Doctor did and didn't do. Well, taking all the facts as composing a broad platform upon which a flat-footed and level-headed journal may stand long enough to ask a question, the paper wanted to know what could be done. It harmonized with the doctrine of the Doctor to the decimal fraction of an atom in the idea that grim death had left the country pitifully partless, and that a pair of new parties was the crying want of the hour. But what to make them of and what kind of gas to breathe into their nostrils when the simple body should be carved out—all that was hard to tell. Both theologian and editor agreed that no issue at present existed sufficiently important, vital and pervasive to keep the new party's heart thumping for a day—and how to create a circulation—venous and arterial—without any blood—that problem stumped the Doctor and his apologist together. At one stage of the grave debate they came near concluding that the political dead bodies were not far enough advanced in the process of decomposition to make the assumption tenable that new parties could be raised up from their dust. For, as it seemed to this couple of speculators, the bodies had not yet turned into dust, but had just life enough remaining to incite them to deny the mortuary impeachment, although not enough to scare away the prevailing undertakers. This, it will at once be perceived, is a modification of the original views of both the Doctor and the newspaper on the question of the actual decrease of the Republican and Democratic parties respectively, but all intelligent men are liable to revise their opinions to correspond with fresh facts and further knowledge. Now, what remains for The Freeman is no more than to say that the actual speculation concerning new parties in politics and how to carry them out is unavailing as a child's dream of a star. "The party of the future" will be born when it is wanted—not before; and when its infant war-cry splits our helpless ears we shall know whether it is a band of Modocs or a lot of Christian statesmen, like— but why call names? Parties are not made to order—they spring up from causes as do oak trees or up trees, from the soil to which they are native. Modern Democracy was a child of slavery, as a political institution, and died with it. Republicanism was the consolidation and amplification of the opposite sentiment and began to wane toward extinction when the slave question passed the crisis of its fate. Both these will soon be merged in some new phase of organized feeling and opinion; what it will be, nobody knows to-day and it is not of the least consequence that they should. It may be worth while to remember, as Charles Sumner used to say, "over all is God."

It is costly this summer, and more than a thousand families in every large town have debated how they could pay the extortionate rates asked for it, while still regarding it as a necessity. REMARKABLE EXPLOSION OF NITRO-GLYCERINE.

We learn from the Wheeling Times particulars of a remarkable explosion of a nitro-glycerine can, showing the terrible force of this explosive. David Deyo and his wife are employed on the New York & Canada Railroad. He employs several men, all of whom live on the boat where the explosion occurred, opposite Patterson Landing, at Putnam, last Tuesday. Deyo picked up an old tin can, which he took aboard the boat. He had succeeded in obtaining the same open, which he intended to use as a collar for a stove-pipe hose. He called his wife to assist him to hold it down with both hands, while he, with a long iron chisel, proceeded to cut a hole in it. Deyo noticed that the can appeared to be greasy, but gave it little thought. He had struck several blows when a fearful explosion occurred. The greasy substance on the tin proved to be nitro-glycerine. Mrs. Deyo was blown into the lake, while Deyo himself was blown toward the stern of the boat. Three young men, H. Purple, Post, Tyrell and Wickes were inside the shanty, and pieces of the tin went whirling by them, having been blown through the board partition.

Assistance was immediately rendered to Mrs. Deyo. Her clothing was completely blown off her body. She presented a horrible sight. The flesh covering the abdomen was cut open from a point just above the groin to the left hip bone, completely exposing the intestines, leaving a terrible-looking gash. On both arms the flesh was literally dug out on the under side, disclosing the cords and bones. The hands were shockingly mutilated. When the woman was taken aboard the boat she fainted. She lay in that unconscious condition till the morning. Deyo was found to be badly wounded. The fatal explosion dug its way into the fleshy thigh of the left leg. The powerful sinews and cords were laid bare. The explosive seemed to tear beneath the flesh. Deyo's arms were cut on the under side, his hands were shockingly mutilated. The tin was blown into small pieces, as Deyo's face, lips and forehead seems to be cut in pieces. The wounds look as if they had been done by small pieces of iron.

While the woman's wounds were being dressed, she came to her senses. She asked "What is the matter?" She was told that the tin can contained nitro-glycerine, and had exploded. She immediately replied that she remembered holding a piece of tin for David to cut; but she had no remembrance of its exploding. The next day (Wednesday), after the occurrence, it was thought advisable to bring the boat to Wheeling. On Wednesday afternoon the boat arrived here, and tied up in the Delaware & Hudson Company's slip.

The sufferings of both are intense, although they are kept under the influence of morphia. Great fears are entertained that mortification may set in and prove fatal to Mrs. Deyo. Mr. Deyo will no doubt recover, as his injuries are flesh wounds. The powerful effects of the explosive are shown on the cabin of the boat, where the tin lay when it exploded. A hole about six inches in diameter was made in the roof, which is three inches in thickness exactly. The chisel that Deyo was cutting with, which was a long one-half inch wide strip of steel, was found some distance from the boat on shore. The explosion was heard a mile away. The sound was like that of a blast. There was but little of the material on the can, which shows the power of the dangerous explosive.

NEW ORLEANS, June 21.—At half-past twelve last night when the last forms of the Bulletin newspaper were being conveyed to the press room they were seized by the Metropolitan Police, by order of Police Judge McArthur, and locked up in the central station, where they still remain. The Bulletin appeared this morning with six printed and two blank pages, closing with an editorial under the caption of "Another Midnight Order—An Outrage on American Liberty—The Press to be Bullied and Suppressed." The Bulletin says, "Whether Durrell, Kellogg, Badger (Chief of Police) or their underlings are implicated, we cannot say yet; but that this bold, audacious and villainous robbery on the way to the press was effected simply because of the Bulletin's daring and outspoken exposure of fraud and corruption, is certain."

NEW ORLEANS, June 21.—LATER.—Judge McArthur states positively that he did not issue an order for the seizure of the Bulletin's forms. It now appears the police acted under orders of Chief of Police Badger. The power behind Badger has not transpired.

Complimentary.

The Windham Journal has this complimentary allusion to Rev. B. T. Phillips, formerly of the Rondout Presbyterian Church, now located at Windham: "A boarder among us from New York, attended the Presbyterian Church in this village on Sunday last. He gives his experience in the following language: 'We were quite surprised, but very much gratified, to find so neat and tasteful a church edifice so far from the great city. We were equally pleased with the services. The singing was excellent and the congregation devout and attentive. The sermon by Rev. Mr. Phillips was a clear and forcible exhibition of Divine truth. Mr. Phillips is an animated and impressive speaker, and though his discourse was an extemporaneous effort, his serene eye was not less in comparison with the average of sermons in the city pulpits.'"

A Mysterious Dock.

Our neighboring city of Newburgh is such an enterprising place it seems very strange its citizens don't take some steps toward getting a suitable wharf at which steamers can land, and upon which can be placed accommodations for passengers who are about to embark or those who have disembarked. The old wharf at Newburgh with its dirty, dilapidated old barracks, is a blemish of the city's otherwise fair front, and though we have a beam in our eyes we see no reason why we shouldn't remove the mote from our brother's, if we are able so to do.

Trains Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 will run daily, Sun-tion to the needs of its vicinity.

Every advantage to be gained from buying for Cash, and in discounts and differences on time bills, has been realized by us on these invoices, and as the old axiom "Goods well bought are half sold" is still a truism, we count on an active and satisfactory trade.

The practice of our firm in regard to marking profits is generally known, but we reiterate it here, in aiming for a large trade at small advances and with quick returns, rather than the old style of full profits, moderate sales, extended credits, and old goods held for original prices.

In the line of Carpets, we deem ourselves specially fortunate in having made such an entire clearance at our annual stock sale.

Trains No. 7 will run on Monday and Tuesday only, connecting at 10:30 A. M. with Train No. 8. Trains No. 8 will run on Tuesday and Wednesday only, connecting at 10:30 A. M. with Train No. 7. Trains No. 9 and 10 will run on Sunday only, connecting at 10:30 A. M. with Trains No. 7 and 8 at Griffin's Crossing. These goods are not bought in lots at few places, but culled from every leading store in New York City that holds out an attraction or makes an extra inducement on price; and for variety, desirableness and cheapness, they are unequalled in this city.

Our entire stock and main floor is unusually complete and attractive, and it will afford us pleasure to show you these Goods at your earliest convenience.
